PRICE THREE CENTS

SOCIALISTS MAY SPLIT OVER STRIKES

DEMAND NOSKE AND HEINE GO; WATCH KAISER

DEMAND RESIGNATION OF NOSKE AND HEINE ALONG WITH LABOR LEGISLATION

(By Associated Press)

London, March 19.—General von Luetwitz is reported to have left Berlin by airplane. The general strike continues and leaders of the socialist party have formed the following conditions for the resumption of work: Gustav Noske, Minister of Defense and Dr. Heine, Prussian Minister of the Interior, must resign; no animosity for General von Luetwitz and his confederates, extensive participation by workers in the new government and labor legislation to be introduced in the National Assembly.

Say Noske's Gone

It is reported in Berlin that the first stipulation has been fulfilled by Noske leaving the Ministry. Independent socialists have announced that the strike must not be continued against the Ebert government but this view is opposed by other socialist organizations and it is improbable as yet to say which side will be victorious.

Watching Kaiser

Amerongen, Holland, March 19.—Evidence that an extreme close guard has been placed by the Dutch government over former Emperor William was obtained today. Police officers were detailed to follow him a few steps in the rear as he walked about the grounds of the Bentinck Castle.

PORTAGE COUNTY WOMAN AMONG WRECK VICTIMS

ALMOND LADY HAS KNEE INJURED WHEN COACHES LEAVE TRACK

Mrs. George Keough of Almond, Portage county, is named as one of 36 people who were injured when passenger train No. 116 on the North Western road was derailed two and one-half miles south of Oshkosh on Monday afternoon. She is reported to have had her right knee injured. Ice which jammed against a culvert caused the water to undermine the roadbed, the accident resulting. Six coaches were derailed but none of their occupants was seriously injured, according to railroad officials.

Wautoma Man Hurt

H. J. Rowe, of Wautoma, was another victim of the wreck. Mr. Rowe was in the only coach which was thrown completely in the ditch, the car rapidly filling with water. After climbing out a window he assisted saving several other passengers who were in danger of suffocation and drowning.

Shortly after the North Western wreck a Soo line employee discovered that the Soo roadbed was unsafe because of water seeping under the rails. This was almost at the point where the North Western wreck had taken place, the two tracks running parallel for several miles.

Faulty Tracks Delay

The North Western had arranged to route passenger trains over the Soo following the wreck on its own line, but this was halted when it was discovered that the Soo tracks were unsafe. Late Monday night the Soo roadbed had been strengthened and Soo and North Western trains were being operated over it. By Tuesday noon the North Western had cleared the wrecked cars from the scene and restored the track, so that service was resumed.

Bruce, Wis.—At the regular monthly business men's supper, the business men of Bruce subscribed $1,000 in less than one hour toward "Rusk County's $1,000,000 Land Clearing Project."

TAX CHURCH CAPACITY AT LENTEN SERVICES

REV. OLSON GAVE INTERESTING SERMON TO LARGE CROWD

Rev. F. G. Olson spoke to a crowd which taxed the capacity of the First Moravian church Thursday evening at the Lenten services. Standing room was all that was available before the services had been opened.

Rev. Olson chose as his text: "I will therefore chastise him and release him," taken from Luke 23:16.

"The words of Isaiah in the forty-third chapter are surely here fulfilled," Rev. Olson said. "Now they lay hard on Jesus, scourged him, smote him, and spit on him. Pilate pleads with them: 'Behold Your King. I bring him forth to you that ye may know that I find no fault in Him.'"

Has Interesting Sermon

The subject of Rev. Olson's sermon was "Pilate's weak attempt to release Jesus but finally judges him."

"Pilate's intention was to release Jesus in a round about way, he reminds them of the custom of releasing a prisoner," Rev. Olson said, "but in Pilate's conversation with Jesus where Jesus reminded Pilate that he could have no power except it be given him from above, it would seem that a final and earnest effort is made to release Jesus. He reminds Pilate he caused wrath upon himself from above if he misused that power, truth that touched Pilate's natural conscience fear for the Son of God. This teaches us that a frank confession of the truth has a great power and will never be without blessing."

Slave of Opinion

"Pilate subjects Jesus to abuses in order therefore to satisfy the blood thirst of the accusers and appeal to their mercy, but the violence of the plaintiffs and of the mob increases. Their attitude toward the judge becomes threatening. Pilate's intention is stopped. Pilate becomes the slave of popular opinion: 'If thou let this man go thou art not Caesar's friend.' The devil knows how to attack; the devil is a grand psychologist; he knows how to scare people; with threatenings and promises. Pilate gives sentence but in washing his hands he once more confesses Christ's innocence and lays the deed on the consciences of the people. Pilate failed and his name is covered with the memory of his shameful weakness but he did not fall unwarned or fail for want of helpful and stimulating influence."

The chorus choir led in the singing for the evening. Rev. Mellicke of the First Moravian church speaks tonight on "Jesus on the Cross."

SWORD SWALLOWER ATE TABLE KNIFE

LOCAL GIRL HELPS SAVE GREEK WHO IMITATED MAGICIAN

How a local girl aided in saving the life of a Milwaukee Greek who attempted to imitate the sword swallowers of the side shows, is revealed in a letter to Judge and Mrs. W. H. Getts from their daughter, Minnie P. Getts, who is a nurse at Emergency Hospital in Milwaukee. Miss Getts relates a story of a sword swallower who really swallowed 'em, but after having completed the act didn't know how to get the sword out again in order to repeat his performance.

Ate Silver Knife

The story Miss Getts tells in the letter is to the effect that they brot in a prisoner from one of the police stations there in Milwaukee who stated that he had swallowed a silver table knife. He had swallowed the handle first and part of it has reached his stomach, the balance of the knife being in the esophagus. The method Miss Getts describes of their removing it was by placing the man in what they call the knee chest position and then tilted the table until his head was pointing downward. They left him there for one hour and twenty minutes during which time the knife worked back into his mouth, when the doctors got ahold of it with a forcep and removed it. The Greek said that he had seen it done at carnivals and when he put it in his mouth and closed it he didn't think that it would go down.

Was Uninjured

The knife was eight and one-half inches long and seven-eighths of an inch thick, and did not cut the man at all.

FIVE LEGGED CALF

Menasha, Wis.—A five legged calf, weighing 191 pounds, was born on the farm of Joseph Birling, Manitowoc road.

GOT NEARLY SEVEN INCHES OF SNOW

HEAVY FALL COVERS CITY WITH WHITE BLANKET

Snow which started falling at about seven-thirty Thursday evening and which had virtually subsided this morning covered the city and county with a white blanket nearly seven inches thick, according to the figures Mr. Nixon has compiled. The snow was heavy and wet and was one of the first snow storms this winter here the snow as not very dry and light.

The thermometer Thursday registered 43 above at its highest temperature and 22 above at its lowest. Last year the highest was 47 and the lowest 24. The coldest for that day was in 1906 when the thermometer registered one below, the warmest in 1903 when it went up to 72. The character of the day Thursday was cloudy with strong northeast winds.

The indications, Mr. Nixon says, are that there will be colder weather tonight with strong winds followed with clearing eather. The river raised .5 of a foot.

TEACH POLICE PULMOTOR USE

LOCAL AUTHORITIES WILL HAVE MACHINE FOR PUBLIC USE

The use of the pullmotor and first aid instructions for use in case of accidents will be taught to the Grand Rapids police by City Health Officer Dr. A. L. Ridgman, according to Chief Payne, who states that in the future the city pullmotor will be kept at the city hall and be available for immediate use. In addition to the police force that will take the instructions in the first aid and the use of the motor there will be representatives of different factories present to hear the talks and benefit by them.

Plan Practical

The city has owned a pullmotor for several years and in the absence of a better place to keep it, the machine was housed in the City Health Officer's office. While the occasions for its use have been comparatively few there has always been the chance that the doctor would not be in when its use was desired, and it would be worthless in the hands of any one who did not understand its operation. Taking the fact that the police are available day or night when accidents are apt to occur Chief Payne has decided that the men will be instructed in its use. Whenever accidents occur that might be relieved by the use of a pullmotor the police will handle the machine and will be equipped to handle the case until more experienced medical attention can be secured.

Is Successful

This practice is one that is followed out with considerable success in larger cities and it is expected that under the new arrangement more efficient service will be rendered should accidents where a pullmotor might be used occur.

EXPLAINS DELAY OF LEGION PUBLICATION

LOCAL COMMANDER SAYS HEADQUARTERS HAVE CHANGED

Inquiries which are arriving at the office of State Adjutant R. M. Gibson, asking why the American Legion magazine does not reach the subscribers, is explained by the Commander, who states that following the printers and compositors strike in New York the magazine headquarters were moved to Indianapolis, the change delaying the publication of several issues.

Were Delayed

The magazine was supposed to have been published in its new headquarters on March 12th, but as that issue has not arrived it is expected that they were delayed longer than they had expected. The subscribers will receive every one of their fifty-two issues of the paper Mr. Gibson has been assured in spite of the delay that they have experienced.

Legion Magazine

The magazine which is published under the auspices of the Legion goes with each membership, and the members of the Charles Hagerstrom Post here will probably start receiving the magazine again this month.

LOCAL BOWLERS GO TO KENOSHA

WILL REPRESENT GRAND RAPIDS ELKS ON NEW ALLEYS

More than twenty Grand Rapids bowlers, members of the Grand Rapids Lodge No. 693, will board a special sleeper at the St. Paul station tonight headed for Kenosha to attend the annual Elks Bowling Tournament of Wisconsin. The Grand Rapids men will occupy the alleys on Saturday and Sunday, rolling teams, doubles and singles in the annual state match.

Many are Going

The members of the Grand Rapids Lodge who leave here tonight are: C. A. Normington, A. R. Jackson, Dr. O. N. Mortenson, Joe Bissig, Jas. G. Hamilton, Fred C. Ragan, Wm. F. Gleue, O. R. Roenius, Oscar Uehling, M. F. Johnson, M. J. Cress, A. T. Thompson, J. E. Alexander, W. H. Drath, Walter L. Wood, Ed. Bassett, D. W. Middlecamp, P. C. Daly, L. M. Mathis, Earl M. Hill, and Geo. C. Mullen. They will be joined at Milwaukee by Frank Schroeder and Ray Lovejoy, who will continue on the journey to Kenosha with them. Special pullman accommodations have been made at the local station for the transportation of the bowlers.

Look for Good Scores

The men invading the Kenosha Lodge this year represent many of the best bowlers in the city and it is expected that some good scores will be hung up on the new alleys at the club in that city. Kenosha has recently opened what is conceded to be the finest Elks Club House in Wisconsin, incorporating swimming pools, athletic rooms, and many other conveniences and attractions not found in most of the club houses of the state. The bowling tournament this year was awarded to them on account of their spacious quarters in which to entertain the visitors and the local Elks are planning a big outing.

Have Record

The Grand Rapids team who went to Manitowoc last year to the Elks tournament rolled up some of the best score recorded at the contests. They not only shared in the prizes but established a record in state bowling circles that the other Elks in Wisconsin are looking to them to duplicate at Kenosha this year.

VOCATIONAL COUNCIL FOR THE BOY SCOUTS

ROTARY CLUB UNITES WITH YOUTHS TO ADVISE FOR FUTURE

In keeping with the progress of education in other places Grand Rapids is to have a Vocational Guidance Movement. The Rotary Club and the Boy Scout Council have appointed a joint committee to have charge of this work. The committee consists of M. H. Jackson, E. G. Doudna, T. W. Brazau, Guy O. Babcock, A. C. Bernard and James F. Knapp.

The purpose of the Vocational Guidance Movement is not to decide for the boy or girl what trade or profession he shall follow in life, but rather to see that he is furnished with the information necessary for making an intelligent selection.

The Librarian is cooperating in a very fine manner, by securing books, pamphlets, bulletins, etc., along the various lines. It is expected that a special display of this material will be made shortly. One feature of the work of the local committee will be the securing of speakers representing the various trades and professions to speak to the high school students along their particular line of work. It is hoped by means of the form of instruction to help many boys and girls to find themselves as far as their life work is concerned. Meanwhile, the various members of the committee wish the boys of Grand Rapids to feel free to come to them for consultation and advice at anytime.

RESUME INVESTIGATION

LaCrosse, Wis.—After two adjournments, the United States grand jury will reconvene here Tuesday to resume its investigation to the high cost of living. Consumers, retailers, jobbers and manufacturers have been summoned to give testimony. In January and February the jury investigated meats, shoes, sugar and clothing. It is understood that this week the jury will devote its time largely to an inquiry of profits in garments.

SATURDAY LAST DAY FOR TAX COLLECTION

ACCOUNTS TO BE TURNED OVER TO COUNTY ON MONDAY

Saturday will be the last day that taxes will be collected by City Treasurer Louis Schall for the city of Grand Rapids, after this time the books being turned over to the County Treasurer who will collect the taxes with an additional charge of 5 percent. According to Mr. Schall the amount that will be turned over to the county for collection this year will be the smallest in several years, most of the tax payers having settled their accounts without much delay this year.

WANT BRICE IN VERMONT TOWN

COMMISSION MERCHANT SOUGHT BY POLICE AFTER GAME IS PLAYED IN EAST-ERN STATE

Geo. W. Brice, who is wanted by the local police for swindling farmers and small town commission men in the central part of the state out of several thousand dollars, while operating in this city during October, is also wanted at Bellow Falls, Vermont, for working a similar game there last December. It is evident that Brice got under cover for a short time after operating here and then established in Bellow Falls, where he was successful.

A circular which has come from the government postal inspectors at Boston, Mass., to Chief of Police R. S. Payne, describes Brice very accurately and while he did not operate under the name of Brice there it is undoubtedly the same man.

Describes Brice

The circular says Joseph R. Batten, alias Henry Anderson & Son; G. W. Shaw; G. H. Ford; J. A. White; J. A. Jones, J. B. Harper & Co.; J. H. Johnson & Co. and others is wanted for operating a commission business such as Brice operated here. The description, which describes him as being about fifty-five years of age, 190 pounds, about five feet nine inches in height; slightly deaf, light sandy, reddish hair, slightly bald, large and very pointed nose, gray eyes, smooth shaven, talks with an accent and is a very interesting conversationalist, is a very accurate description of Mr. Brice people who were acquainted with him state. He is wanted in North Dakota, Colorado, California, Washington, and Vermont as well as here.

Hard to Catch

In describing his operations the circular says that Batten usually locates at a place with good shipping facilities near a large city, opening a bank account and uses the mails and telephone to solicit shipments of produce for which he never pays. Names of shippers are usually secured by him from express agents, the express agents being offered a commission on shipments from their station. The man is a clever swindler, the circular says, and clears several thousands of dollars at every place he operates. Difficulty in catching him is experienced, they say because of the fact that when complaints come in he is gone.

POTATOES SET RECORD PRICE AT ST. POINT

SOAR WHEN BAD ROADS MAKE FARMERS STAY AT HOME

"All high prices for Portage county potatoes were shattered at the public square on Wednesday," says the Stevens Point Journal, "when local dealers paid all the way from $5 to $5.20 per hundred pounds, or $3 and more a bushel."

In spite of the soaring prices, few potatoes are being brought to market; not because farmers are unwilling to sell at this price, but because the roads are in such condition as to make travel almost impossible.

One farmer residing near Polonia drove to the city this morning with six sacks of potatoes, only a fraction of a load, but his wagon tipped over three times before reaching town.

One well known local dealer stated today that so far as he could remember, the present prices are higher by a substantial margin than any other high prices paid in the history of the city of county.

FINDS I. W. W. CARD ON STREET

LEO COOPER TURNED OVER TO CHIEF PAYNE

An I. W. W. membership card, belonging to a laborer named Leo Cooper, was picked up on the street near the St. Paul station in this city and has been turned over to Chief of Police R. S. Payne. The card shows that Mr. Cooper has paid his membership until January 26th of the present year, and was a member in good standing at that time. Inquiries at local factories reveals no such employee hired under that name. While inquiries are being made by the local police it is expected that Cooper was passing thru town and lost the certificate.

I. W. W. Preamble

The preamble which is found in the front of the little leather bound book which Mr. Cooper carried as his membership card, is reproduced here that people not familiar with some of the I. W. W. principles may know what they stand for. The preamble says:

"The working class and the employing class have nothing in common, there can be no peace so long as hunger and want are found among millions of the working people and the few, who make up the employing class have all the good things of life."

Take Possession

"Between these two classes the struggle must go on until the workers of the world organize in their class, take possession of the earth and the machinery of production, and abolish the wage system."

"We find that the centering of the management of industries into fewer hands makes the trade unions unable to cope with the ever growing power of the employing class. The trade unions foster a state of affairs which allows one set of workers to be pitted against another set of workers in the same industry, thereby helping defeat one another in wage wars. Moreover the trade unions aid the employing class to mislead the workers into the belief that the working class have interests in common with their employers."

"These conditions can be changed and the interests of the working class upheld only by an organization formed in such a way that all its members in any one industry, or in all industries if necessary, cease work whenever a strike or lockout is on in any department thereof, thus making an injury to an injury to all."

Revolutionary Motto

"Instead of the conservative motto, 'A fair day's wage for a fair day's work' we must inscribe on our banner the revolutionary watchword, 'Abolition of the wage system.'"

"It is the historic mission of the working class to do away with capitalism. The army of production must be organized, not only for the every day struggle with capitalists, but also to carry on production when capitalism shall have been overthrown. By organizing industrially we are forming the structure of the new society within the shell of the old."

STOLE COW BUT LATER BROUGHT ANIMAL BACK

CHANGED HIS MIND AND PUT BOSSY BACK IN OWNER'S BARN

A case at Marshfield, reported by the Herald, is peculiar, in that the thief either got scared or his conscience bothered him. A cow stabled in the Springborn barn was stolen and remained away three days and was returned to the barn. The theft and return was done during the dark hours of the night and the fellow who did it all is still at large. Tracks in the snow the night the cow was missed led for a distance and then were lost in the traffic of main street. The cow was returned as mysteriously as she was taken, but nevertheless, a reward has been offered by Albert Paulson, the owner, for the detection of the culprit.

WISCONSIN BREVITIES

LAWRENCE DEFEATED

Appleton, Wis.—Lawrence college debaters were defeated twice in the first triangular debate of the year. The affirmative team lost here to Cornell college by the unanimous vote of three judges, and the negative team was defeated, two to one, by Carleton college at Northfield, Minn. The question for debate was: Resolved that the federal government shall enact legislation providing for compulsory arbitration of all labor disputes in public utilities, constitutionality granted.

PROHIBIT GAMBLING

Darlington, Wis.—The common council has adopted an ordinance prohibiting gambling within the limits of the city. A mania for poker playing seems to have attacked the older boys of the city and to give the authorities control of the nuisance this ordinance was passed.

TO OPEN CLUB HOUSE

Green Bay, Wis.—The new home of the Woman's Club of Green Bay, which will be occupied by the club early next fall, will preserve one of the oldest homesteads in the city and much of the atmosphere of "historic Green Bay" of the 1850's and previous decades. The club has purchased the old Morrow homestead, built nearly seventy years ago, and it will be repaired and partially rebuilt, retaining however, the general effect and restoring to it the green blinds. The front or main portion of the house will remain practically intact. The wing in the rear will be rebuilt and extended to the side street to provide an auditorium 40 by 45 feet with a balcony on the long side. The auditorium will be separated from the clubhouse by French doors. The lower floor, with its old-fashioned fireplace, will be furnished entirely with heirlooms of old Green Bay families, primarily old mahogany pieces.

PAY TEACHERS BONUS

Watertown, Wis.—Teachers in the public schools have been granted a bonus of $150 each by the school board to be paid in a lump sum at the end of the present school year. The action was taken after Ida Barganz, Ida Kepp, Mary Crangle and Bernadette Carry appeared as a committee representing the teachers and petitioned the board for the bonus.

REFUSED DIVORCE

LaCrosse, Wis.—The fact that a marriage is absurd does not justify a court in granting a divorce in the opinion of Judge E. C. Higbee, who denied the petition of Emma Narverson for a separation from Thomas Narverson. Both had been married before and were the parents of mature children when they wedded. She alleged non-support and drunkenness, neither of which charge was proven in the opinion of the court.

HAVE HOME DEMONSTRATOR

Marquette, Wis.—Miss Vera B. Spinney, home demonstration agent for Marquette county, arrived to enter upon her duties. She will work with the county department of education and also with the training school. She recently returned from the Balkans, where she had been for six months doing Red Cross work and previous to that was with the health department at Washington, D. C.

TO FORM SUPPLY TRAIN

Sturgeon Bay, Wis.—A battalion of motor ammunition supply train, for the national guard, is the new prospect. Maj. Imhoff, Green Bay, visited this city recently and put the proposition before ex-service men, and this city will organize a company of full strength shortly. Besides Sturgeon Bay, companies are expected to be organized at Kewaunee, Black River Falls and one other city.

MANITOWOC'S BIRTHDAY

Manitowoc, Wis.—Manitowoc is 50 years old, but the celebration planned has been postponed until later in the spring, when a homecoming will be held. The city was founded in 1870 by A. D. Jones, Peter Johnston, father of Mrs. R. H. Markham, was the first mayor. Altho Manitowoc is officially only a half century old, the history dates back nearly a hundred years. The first grant of land for settlement was recorded in 1835. John Schroeder, the present executive, has appointed committees to plan for the homecoming.

TO COMPLETE STUDIES

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—The Rev. Paul Turner will complete his studies in McCormick Theological seminary in Chicago and come to fill the pulpit of the Presbyterian church in Chippewa Falls May 2. The Rev. Lea, who has served as pastor of the United Lutheran church for the past twenty-two years, expects to move to Lodi, Wis., in June. The Rev. G. A. Sovia of Forest City, Iowa, will succeed him in Chippewa Falls. He is instructor in the Waldorf Lutheran college at Forest City.

DISPUTE WITH PRODUCES

Elkhorn, Wis.—Because of the controversy between the Milk Producers' Co-operative Marketing Co. and the Nestles Company, which has refused to buy milk from the farmers' organization, farmers have been compelled to seek other markets to get rid of their milk supply.

WANT UNION DEPOT

LaCrosse, Wis.—LaCrosse civic, commercial and official organizations will present a united front in support of the union depot project when the Railroad Commission of Wisconsin holds a hearing here on March 30, on the petition of the Chamber of Commerce for a joint terminal. Representatives of practically all important organizations in the city are on a joint committee which is planning the hearing.

LEGION GROWING

LaCrosse, Wis.—Membership of the American Legion in this city is growing by leaps and bounds. Thirty new members were taken in at the meeting this week. The organization is planning to put on a minstrel show April 10.

LIKES POLAND

Eau Claire, Wis.—"I find the Poles delightful and they are very friendly when one really knows them. Poland is a big plain around Warsaw—cold, and damp and dirty—but patriotic." So writes Miss Elizabeth Craybeal.

Miss Craybeal helped run the educational and entertainment end of the Y. M. C. A. in France immediately after reaching France. After the war she was sent to Poland. In her letter she tells of the cold and hunger pinched countenances of the people one sees on the streets of Warsaw.

FAIL TO SELL BONDS

LaCrosse, Wis.—Construction of the two school buildings is being held up here as a result of failure to sell $300,000 bonds. The common council will make another attempt to sell the bonds, increasing the interest rate from 4 3/4 to 5 percent, and the issue will be offered to local investors.

READY TO MUSTER IN

Manitowoc, Wis.—Manitowoc's new unit in the national guard is to be ready for muster in on March 31 and state headquarters have been advised to that effect. The unit will be an infantry company and will be in charge of Capt. Edward Schmidt.

GOING TO CHINA

Appleton, Wis.—Leonard Peabody, son of Dr. H. E. Peabody, pastor of the First Congregational church, has been selected to go to China and become an instructor in English at Oberlin College of China at Sharzi. The young man will graduate from Oberlin College, Oberlin, O., in June. He will join his parents at their summer home near Ludington, Mich., before going to the Orient where he expects to remain a year. His selection for work in the Far East was based on scholarship.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Pioneer in the California redwood region, John Cardigan, at forty-seven, is the leading citizen of Sequoia, owner of mills, ships, and many acres of timber, a widower after three years of married life, and father of two-day-old Bryce Cardigan.

CHAPTER II.—At fourteen Bryce makes the acquaintance of Shirley Sumner, a visitor to Sequoia, and his junior by a few years. Together they visit the Valley of the Giants, sacred to John Cardigan and his son as the burial place of Bryce's mother, and part with mutual regret.

CHAPTER III.—While Bryce is at college John Cardigan meets with heavy business losses and for the first time views the future with uncertainty.

CHAPTER IV.—After graduation from college, and a trip abroad, Bryce Cardigan comes home. On the train he meets Shirley Sumner, on her way to Sequoia to make her home there. Bryce learns that his father's eyesight has failed and that Col. Pennington is seeking to take advantage of the old man's business misfortunes.

CHAPTER V.—In the Valley of the Giants young Cardigan finds a tree felled directly across his mother's grave. Indications are that it was cut down to secure the burl, and evidence seems to show that Pennington and his woods-boss, Jules Rondeau, are implicated in the outrage.

CHAPTER VI.—Dining with Col. Pennington and his niece, Bryce finds the room paneled with redwood burl, confirming his suspicions of Pennington's guilt. In a diplomatic way, unperceived by Shirley, the two men declare war.

CHAPTER VII.—Pennington refuses to renew his logging contract with the Cardigans, believing his action means bankruptcy for the latter. Bryce forces Rondeau to confess he felled the tree in the Valley of the Giants, at Pennington's order. After punishing the man, Bryce hurls him at Col. Pennington, who with Shirley, had witnessed the fight. Pennington is humiliated, and the girl, indignant, orders Bryce to leave her and forget their friendship. He leaves, but refuses to accept dismissal.

CHAPTER VIII.—Returning to Sequoia, the train on which Shirley, her uncle, and Bryce are traveling, breaks away from the locomotive and Bryce, who could have escaped, at the risk of his life cuts out the caboose and saves them from certain death, being painfully injured in doing so.

"You had a hunch, Moira. Do you get those telephatic messages very often?" He was crossing the office to shake her hand.

"I've never noticed particularly—that is, until I came to work here. But I always know when you are returning after a considerable absence." She gave him her hand. "I'm so glad you're back."

"Why?" he demanded bluntly.

She flushed. "I—I really don't know, Mr. Bryce."

"Well, then," he persisted, "what do you think makes you glad?"

"I had been thinking how nice it would be to have you back, Mr. Bryce. When you enter the office, it's like a breeze rustling the tops of the redwoods. And your father misses you so; he talks to me a great deal about you. Why, of course, we miss you; anybody would."

As he held her hand, he glanced down at it and noted how greatly it had changed during the past few months. From her hand his glance roved over the girl, noting the improvements in her dress, and the way the thick, wavy black hair was piled on top of her shapely head.

"It hadn't occurred to me before, Moira," he said with a bright impersonal smile that robbed his remark of all suggestion of masculine flattery, "but it seems to me I'm unusually glad to see you, also. You've been fixing your hair different. Is this new style the latest in hairdressing in Sequoia?"

"I think so, Mr. Bryce. I copied it from Colonel Pennington's niece, Miss Sumner."

"Oh," he replied briefly. "You've met her, have you? I didn't know she was in Sequoia still."

"She's been away, but she came back last week. I went to the Valley of the Giants last Saturday afternoon."

Bryce interrupted. "You didn't tell me father about the tree that was cut, did you?" he demanded sharply.

"No."

"Good girl! He mustn't know. Go on, Moira. What was she doing in our timber?"

"She told me that once, when she was a little girl, you had taken her for a ride on your pony up to your mother's grave. And it seems she had a great curiosity to see that spot again."

"I've met Miss Sumner three or four times. That was when she first came to Sequoia. She's a stunning girl, isn't she?"

"Perfectly, Mr. Bryce. She's the first lady I've ever met. She's different."

"No doubt! Her kind are not a product of homely little communities like Sequoia. And for that matter, neither is her wolf of an uncle. What did Miss Sumner have to say to you, Moira?"

"She told me all about herself—and she said a lot of nice things about you, Mr. Bryce. After I told her I worked for you. And she insisted that I should walk home with her. So I did—and the butler served us with tea and toast and marmalade. Then she showed me all her wonderful things—and gave me some of them. Oh, Mr. Bryce, she's so sweet."

"I can see that you and Miss Sumner evidently hit it off just right with each other. Are you going to call on her again?"

"Oh, yes! She begged me to. She says she's lonesome."

"I dare say she is, Moira. I'm glad you've gotten to know each other. I've no doubt you find life a little lonely sometimes."

"Sometimes, Mr. Bryce."

"How's my father?"

"Splendid. I've taken good care of him for you."

"Moira, you're a sweetheart of a girl. I don't know how we ever managed to wiggle along without you."

Fraternal—almost paternally—he gave her radiant cheek three light little pats as he strode past her to the private office. He was in a hurry to get to his desk, upon which he could see through the open door a pile of letters and orders, and a moment later he was deep in a perusal of them, oblivious to the fact that ever and anon the girl turned upon him her brooding, Madonna-like glance.

That night Bryce and his father, as was their custom after dinner, repaired to the library, where the bustling and motherly Mrs. Tully served their coffee. John Cardigan opened the conversation with a contented grunt:

"I believe you have something on your mind."

Bryce clipped a cigar and held a lighted match while his father "smoked up." Then he slipped into the easy chair beside the old man.

"Well, John Cardigan," he began eagerly, "I've ripped a big hole in our dark cloud the other day and showed me some of the silver lining. I've been making bad medicine for Colonel Pennington."

"What's in the wind, boy?"

"We're going to parallel Pennington's logging-road."

"Inasmuch as that will cost close to three-quarters of a million dollars, I'm of the opinion that we're not going to do anything of the sort."

"Perhaps. Nevertheless, if I can demonstrate to a certain party that it will not cost more than three-quarters of a million, he'll loan me the money."

The old man shook his head. "I don't believe it, Bryce. Who's the crazy man?"

"His name is Gregory. He's Scotch."

"Now I know he's crazy. When he hands you the money, you'll find he's talking real money, but thinking of Confederate greenbacks."

Bryce laughed. "Pal," he declared, "if you and I have any brains, they must roll around in our skulls like buckshot in a tin pan. Listen, now, with all your ears. When Bill Henderson wanted to build the logging railroad which he afterward sold to Pennington, and which Pennington is now using as a club to beat our brains out, did he have the money to build it?"

"No, I loaned it to him."

"How did he pay you back?"

"Why, he gave me a ten-year contract for hauling our logs at a dollar and a half a thousand feet, and I merely credited his account with the amount of the freight bills he sent me until he'd squared up the loan, principal and interest."

"Well, if Bill Henderson financed himself on that plan, why didn't we think of using the same time-honored plan for financing a road to parallel Pennington's?"

John Cardigan sat up with a jerk. "By thunder!" he murmured. That was as close as he ever came to uttering an oath.

"All right, John Cardigan. I forgive you. Now, then, continue to listen: To the north of that great block of timber held by you and Pennington lie the redwood holdings of the Trinidad Redwood Timber company."

"Never heard of them before."

"Well, timber away in there in back of beyond has never been well advertised, because it is regarded as practically inaccessible. You will remember that some ten years ago a company was incorporated with the idea of building a railroad from Grant's Pass, Ore., on the line of the Southern Pacific, down the Oregon and California coast to tap the redwood belt."

"I remember. There was a big whoop and hurrah and then the proposition died abominably. The engineers found that the cost of construction through that mountainous country was prohibitive."

"Well, before the project died, Gregory and his associates believed that it was going to survive. They quietly gathered together thirty thousand acres of good stuff and then sat down to wait for the railroad. And they are still waiting. Gregory, by the way, is the president of the Trinidad Redwood Timber company. He's an Edinburgh man, and the fly American promoters got him to put up the price of the timber and then mortgaged their interests to him as security for the advance. He foreclosed on their notes five years ago."

"And there he is with his useless timber!" John Cardigan murmured thoughtfully. "The poor Scotch sucker!"

"He isn't poor. The purchase of that timber didn't even dent his bank roll. But he would like to sell his timber, and being Scotch, naturally he desires to sell it at a profit. In order to create a market for it, however, he has to have an outlet to that market. We supply the outlet—with his help; and what happens? Why, timber that cost him fifty and seventy-five cents per thousand feet stumpage—and the actual timber will overrun the cruiser's estimate every time—will be worth two dollars and fifty cents—perhaps more."

"He loans us the money to build our road. We build it—on through our timber and into his. The collateral security which we put up will be a twenty-five-year contract to haul his logs to tidewater on Humboldt bay, at a base freight rate of one dollar and fifty cents, with an increase of twenty-five cents per thousand every five years thereafter, and an option for a renewal of the contract upon expiration, at the rate of freight just paid. In addition we sell him, at a reasonable figure, sufficient land fronting on tidewater to enable him to erect a sawmill, lay out his yards, and build a dock out into the deep water."

"Thus Gregory will have that which he hasn't got now—an outlet to his market by water; and when the railroad to Sequoia builds in from the south, it will connect with the road which we have built from Sequoia up into Township nine to the north; hence Gregory will also have an outlet to his market by rail. He can easily get a good manager to run his lumber business until he finds a customer for it, and in the meantime we will be charging his account with our freight bills against him and gradually pay off the loan without pinching ourselves."

John Cardigan's old hand came graspingly forth and rested affectionately upon his boy's. "You forget, my son, that we cannot last in business long enough to get that road built, even though Gregory should agree to finance the building of it. The interest on our bonded indebtedness is payable on the first—"

"We can meet it, sir."

"Aye, but we can't meet the fifty thousand dollars which, under the terms of our deed of trust, we are required to pay in on July first of each year as a sinking fund toward the retirement of our bonds. Bryce, it just can't be done. We'd have our road about half completed when we'd bust up in business; indeed, the minute Pennington suspected we were paralleling his line, he'd choke off our wind. I tell you it can't be done."

But Bryce contradicted him earnestly. "It can be done," he said. "If we can start building our road and have it half completed before Pennington jumps on us, Gregory will simply have to come to our aid in self-defense. Once he ties up with us, he's committed to the task of seeing us through. I can do it, I tell you."

John Cardigan raised his hand. "No," he said firmly. "I will not allow you to do this. That way—that is the Pennington method. If we fall, my son, we pass out like gentlemen, not like blackguards. We will not take advantage of this man Gregory's faith. If he joins forces with us, we lay our hand on the table and let him look."

"Then he'll never join hands with us, partner. We're done."

"We're not done, my son. We have one alternative, and I'm going to take it. I've got to—for your sake. Moreover, your mother would have wished it so."

"You don't mean—"

"Yes, I do. I'm going to sell Pennington my Valley of the Giants. It is my personal property, and it is not mortgaged. Pennington can never foreclose on it—and until he gets it, twenty-five hundred acres of virgin timber on Squaw creek are valueless—nay, a source of expense to him. Bryce, he has to have it; and he'll pay the price, when he knows I mean business."

With a sweeping gesture he waved aside the arguments that rose to his son's lips. "Lead me to the telephone," he commanded; and Bryce, recognizing his sire's unalterable determination, obeyed.

"Find Pennington's number in the telephone book," John Cardigan commanded next.

Bryce found it, and his father proceeded to get the Colonel on the wire. "Pennington," he said hoarsely, "this is John Cardigan speaking. I've decided to sell you that quarter-section that blocks your timber on Squaw creek."

"Indeed," the Colonel purred. "I had an idea you were going to present it to the city for a natural park."

"I've changed my mind. I've decided to sell at your last offer."

"I've changed my mind, too. I've decided not to buy—at my last offer. Good-night."

Slowly John Cardigan hung the receiver on the hook, turned and groped for his son. When he found him, the old man held him for a moment in his arms. "Lead me upstairs, son," he murmured presently. "I'm tired. I'm going to bed."

When Colonel Seth Pennington turned from the telephone and faced his niece, Shirley read his triumph in his face. "Old Cardigan has capitulated at last," he cried exultingly. "He just telephoned to say he'd accept my last offer for his Valley of the Giants."

"But you're not going to buy it. You told him so, Uncle Seth."

"Of course I'm not going to buy it. At my last offer. It's worth five thousand dollars in the open market, and once I offered him fifty thousand for it. Now I'll give him five."

"I wonder why he wants to sell," Shirley mused. "From what Bryce Cardigan told me once, his father attaches a sentimental value to that strip of woods; his wife is buried there."

"He's selling it because he's desperate. If he wasn't teetering on the verge of bankruptcy, he'd never let me outgame him," Pennington replied gaily. "I'll wait until he has gone bust—and save twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars."

"I think you're biting off your nose to spite your face, Uncle Seth. The Laguna Grande Lumber company needs that outlet. In dollars and cents, what is it worth to the company?"

"If I thought I couldn't get it from Cardigan a few months from now, I'd go as high as a hundred thousand for it tonight," he answered coolly.

"In that event, I advise you to take it for fifty thousand. It's terribly hard on old Mr. Cardigan to have to sell it, even at that price."

"You do not understand these matters, Shirley. Don't try. And don't waste your sympathy on that old humbug. He has to dig up fifty thousand dollars to pay on his bonded indebtedness, and he's finding it a difficult job. He's just sparring for time, but he'll lose out."

As if to indicate that he considered the matter closed, the Colonel drew his chair toward the fire, picked up a magazine, and commenced idly to flip the pages. Shirley studied the back of his head for some time, then got out some fancy work and commenced plying her needle. And as she pined it, a thought, nebulous at first, gradually took form in her head until eventually she murmured loud enough for the Colonel to hear:

"I'll do it."

"Do what?" Pennington queried.

"Something nice for somebody who did something nice for me," she answered.

About two o'clock the following afternoon old Judge Moore of the Superior court of Humboldt county, drifted into Bryce Cardigan's office, sat down unmolested, and lifted his long legs to the top of an adjacent chair.

"Well, Bryce, my boy," he began, "a little bird tells me your daddy is considering the sale of Cardigan's Redwoods, or the Valley of the Giants. How about it?"

Bryce stared at him a moment questioningly. "Yes, judge," he replied, "we'll sell, if we get our price."

"Well," his visitor drawled, "I have a client who might be persuaded. I'm here to talk turkey. What's your price?"

"Before we talk price," Bryce parried, "I want you to answer a question."

"Let her fly," said Judge Moore.

"Are you, directly or indirectly, acting for Colonel Pennington?"

"That's none of your business, young man—at least, it would be none of your business if I were, directly or indirectly, acting for that unconvicted thief. To the best of my information and belief, Colonel Pennington doesn't figure in this deal in any way, shape or manner; and as you know, I've been your daddy's friend for thirty years."

Still Bryce was not convinced, notwithstanding the fact that he would have staked his honor on the judge's veracity. Nobody knew better than he in what devious ways the Colonel worked, his wondrous to perform.

"Well," he said, "I can name you a price. I will state frankly, however, that I believe it to be over your head. We have several times refused to sell to Colonel Pennington for a hundred thousand dollars."

"Naturally that little dab of timber is worth more to Pennington than to anybody else. However, my client has given me instructions to go as high as a hundred thousand if necessary to get the property."

"What?"

"I said it. One hundred thousand dollars of the present standard weight and fineness."

Judge Moore's last statement swept away Bryce's suspicions. He required now no further evidence that, regardless of the identity of the judge's client, that client could not possibly be Col. Seth Pennington or anyone acting for him, since only the night before Pennington had curtly refused to buy the property for fifty thousand dollars. For a moment Bryce stared stupidly at his visitor. Then he recovered his wits.

"Sold!" he almost shouted, and after the fashion of the West extended his hand to clench the bargain. The judge shook it solemnly. "The Lord loveth a quick trader," he declared. "Here's the deed already made out in favor of myself, as trustee." He winked knowingly.

"Client's a bit modest, I take it," Bryce suggested.

"Oh, very. Of course I'm only hazarding a guess, but that guess is that the Colonel is in for a razzooing at the hands of somebody with a small grouse against him."

"May the Lord strengthen that somebody's arm," Bryce breathed fervently. "If your client can afford to hold out long enough, he'll be able to buy Pennington's Squaw creek timber at a bargain."

"My understanding is that such is the program."

Bryce, rejoiced for the deed, then reached for his hat. "If you'll be good enough to wait here, Judge Moore, I'll run up to the house and get my father to sign this deed. The Valley of the Giants is his personal property, you know. He didn't include it in his assets when incorporating the Cardigan Redwood Lumber company."

A quarter of an hour later he returned with the deed duly signed by John Cardigan and witnessed by Bryce; whereupon the judge carelessly tossed his certified check for a hundred thousand dollars on Bryce's desk and departed whistling "Turkey in the Straw." Bryce reached for the telephone and called up Colonel Pennington.

"Bryce Cardigan speaking," he began, but the Colonel cut him short.

"My dear, impulsive young friend," he interrupted in oleaginous tones, "how often do you have to be told that I am not quite ready to buy that quarter-section?"

"Oh," Bryce retorted, "I merely called up to tell you that every dollar and every asset you have in the world, including your heart's blood, isn't sufficient to buy the Valley of the Giants from me now."

"Oh? What's that? Why?"

"Because, my dear, overcautious and thoroughly unprincipled enemy, it was said five minutes ago for the tidy sum of one hundred thousand dollars, and if you don't believe me, come over to my office and I'll let you feast your eyes on the certified check."

He could hear a distinct gasp. After an interval of five seconds, however, the Colonel recovered his poise. "I congratulate you," he purred. "I suppose I'll have to wait a little longer now, won't I? Well—patience is my middle name. An revoir."

The Colonel hung up. His hard face was ashen with rage, and he stared at a calendar on the wall with his cold phidian stare. However, he was not without a generous stock of optimism. "Somebody has learned of the loss of state of the Cardigan fortune," he mused, "and taken advantage of it to induce the old man to sell at last. They're figuring on selling to me at a neat profit. And I certainly did overplay my hand last night. However, there's nothing to do now except sit tight and wait for the new owner's next move."

Meanwhile, in the general office of the Cardigan Redwood Lumber company, joy was rampant. Bryce Cardigan was doing a buck and wing dance around the room, while Moira McTavish, with her back to her tall desk, watched him, in her eyes a tremendous joy and a sweet, yearning glow of adoration that Bryce was too happy and excited to notice.

Suddenly he paused before her. "Moira, you're a lucky girl," he declared. "I thought this morning you were going back to a kitchen in a logging camp. It almost broke my heart to think of fate's swindling you like that." He put his arm around her and gave her a brotherly hug. "It's autumn in the woods, Moira, and all the underbrush is golden."

She smiled, though it was winter in her heart.

CHAPTER X.

A careful analysis of Shirley's feelings toward Bryce Cardigan immediately following the incident in Pennington's woods, had showed her that under more propitious circumstances she might have fallen in love with that tempestuous young man in sheer recognition of the many lovable and manly qualities she had discerned in him. As an offset to the credit side of Bryce's account with her, however, there appeared certain debts in the consideration of which Shirley always lost her temper and was immediately quite certain she loathed the unfortunate man.

He had been an honored and (for aught Shirley knew to the contrary) welcome guest in the Pennington home one night, and the following day had assaulted his host, committed great bodily injuries upon the latter's employees for little or no reason save the satisfaction of an abominable temper, made threats of further violence, declared his unflinching enmity to her nearest and best-loved relative, and in the next breath had had the insolence to prate of his respect and admiration for her.

However, all of these grave crimes and misdemeanors were really insignificant compared with his crowning offense. What had infuriated Shirley was the fact that she had been at some pains to inform Bryce Cardigan that she loathed him; whereat he had looked her over coolly, grinned a little, and declined to believe her. Then, seemingly as if fate had decreed that her futility should be impressed upon her still further, Bryce Cardigan had been granted an opportunity to save, in a strikingly calm, heroic and painful manner, her and her uncle from certain and horrible death, thus placing upon Shirley an obligation that was as irritating to acknowledge as it was futile to attempt to reciprocate.

That was where the shoe pinched. Before that day was over she had been forced to do one of two things—acknowledge in no uncertain terms her indebtedness to him, or remain silent, and to be convicted of having been in plain language, a rotter. So she had telephoned him and purposely left ajar the door to their former friendly relations.

Monstrous! He had seen the open door and deliberately slammed it in her face. Luckily for them both she had heard, all unsuspected by him, as he slowly hung the receiver on the hook, the colloquy wherein he gave her a pointed hint of the distress with which he abdicated—which knowledge was all that deterred her from displaying him with the fervor of a woman scorned.

The fascination which a lighted candle holds for a moth is too well known to require further elucidation here. In yielding one day to a desire to visit the Valley of the Giants, Shirley told herself that she was going there to gather wild blackberries. Had been thinking of a certain blue berry pie, which thought naturally induced reflection on Bryce Cardigan and reminded Shirley of her first visit to the Giants under the escort of a boy in knickerbockers.

The Wonders of America

By T. T. MAXEY

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

GLACIER is one of the newer of great "outdoor museums" or national parks. Scattered throughout 1,400 square miles is a jumble of mountains, glaciers, rivers, lakes and falls which looks like "the C. Builder had left the odds and ends of his world making here in one corner of a heap."

A newspaper man toiled his way to the top of one of the sky trails. Resting on a boulder and looking far out over the forests, across flower-carpeted valley to a superb beautiful mountain lake, he declared he had discovered "Where God is when he made America."

The dominating feature of Glacier is its magnificently carved mountain. It contains some of the most tremendous panoramas in the world. So of its peaks remind one of cathedrals, others of forts and castles. The sun and winds of hundreds of years have tinted their summits with varying hues. Often their sides are covered with great, slow-moving glaciers—fields, some of which travel fully a mile in a year. Between or below them are splendid forests of pine, meadows between these wooded patches are a riot of wild flowers.

But the supreme beauty of this park is its mountain-hemmed, mirror lakes, fed by glacial streams which tumble down the mountain sides, in tall, ribbonlike falls of great beauty. Add to this an occasional glimpse of a Swiss chalet (for the accommodation of visitors) and you have an unbeatable combination for the tourist of the wild and the beautiful.

STONE CURBS INJURE TIRES

Running into or Driving Too Close to Concrete Will Shorten Life of Any Tire.

Rubber curbs may not be feasible, but what a lot of tire expense they would save. Backing into a curb, running into a curb or driving too close to a curb, so that the tire scrapes along the concrete and damages the side walls of the tire, are three ways of shortening the life of your tires.

When it is necessary to employ the low gear for a considerable period it is possible to obviate the overheating that would ordinarily result by keeping the mixture in the leanest possible condition.

This malt sugar not only gives it a wonderful flavor, but it also gives it a higher percentage of energy production than any other food. Add to this the fact that it is the easiest to digest of any article of food and you'll know why it is so popular when presented in this delicious form as "Cream of Barley."

"The Food with a History"

The Wonders of America

By T. T. MAXEY

OUR MIGHTIEST HOT SPRING.

ALMOST in the center of Wyoming, near a bend in the Big Horn river and 4,350 feet above sea level, nature brought to the surface, for the benefit of all humanity, her most notable work in the hot-spring line. Here, from a rough-edged opening approximately 25 feet in diameter, and which may come through from China for all anybody knows—since it has been sounded to a depth of 1,000 feet and no bottom found, there bubbles forth about 18,000,000 gallons of 135-degree hot water, possessing untold medicinal value, every 24 hours.

This health fount was discovered by a wandering band of Indians. When the white man came he named it "Big Horn Hot Spring," because the water was finally tumbled over a 40-foot cliff in a beautiful waterfall to the river below. A city was built by the river. They called it Thermopolis (Hot City), because of its nearness to the spring.

The government purchased the tract on which the spring is located in 1887. Washakie, chief of the Shoshone, agreed only on condition that a portion of the water be reserved forever free for public use. Later, when the government ceded the land to the state, the same clause was inserted in the patent. Thus this great nature-made anti-toxin for many ills which beset humanity has been preserved for the use of everybody for all time. A natural admixture of sulphur, lime, magnesia, iron and silica, this water possesses exceptional restorative properties in the treatment of blood and skin diseases and rheumatism.

Boy Scouts of America

Local Scout News

A number of scouts are planning to take the 9:30 a. m. car to Port Edwards where they will join the boy scouts of that place at the school house and then with them hike to the Birch Lodge. Any scouts desiring to go along on this trip will come prepared for the day, with sufficient food for a good meal. The object of the hike will be to pass tests and study the trees. Scout Executive Knapp will be in charge of the detail from Grand Rapids. Mr. Verbunker and Mr. McGowan are going along from the Port. Several local scoutmasters have expressed a desire to go along and it is hoped they will be able to do so. A few will go down to Nekoosa on the 12:30 car and hike back with the boys. A new meaning for "B. S. A." In a talk on "Safety First" at Troop 1 last Tuesday evening Mr. Boyer called the attention of the boys to the fact that the letters "B. S. A." also stand for "Be Safe Always". His talk was greatly enjoyed by the scouts. He will talk to the boys of Troop No. 5 Monday evening. Mr. Boyer is asking the Boy Scouts to enlist in a "Safety First" Campaign to prevent accidents in this city.

AVOID TROUBLE IN INNER TUBE

If Not in Good Shape Driver Is Liable to Encounter Many Unnecessary Delays.

MUCH TIME LOST REPAIRING

If It Has Been Carried for Any Length of Time as a Spare It Is Always Best to Pump It Up before Putting in Casing.

A great deal of unnecessary trouble, delay and disappointment is occasioned by carelessness and haste in replacing damaged inner tubes after punctures or deflations from other causes—the tire failing to "hold up" on the tube put in or holding up for a very short time only, and still another change of tube, with all its attendant labor, being required before a permanent repair is effected.

Pump Fairly Hard. If the tube to be put in has been used before, if it has been repaired, and especially if it has been carried for some time as a spare, it is always best to pump it up before putting it in the casing to make sure that it is tight. It should be pumped fairly hard and the air applied to all parts of it to detect the "hiss" of any leak that may have developed.

The valve plunger should be screwed in tight and a little saliva applied to the air valve opening to see whether the valve is tight. In case deflation was due to a puncture, the hole in the casing, unless of very small size, may well be temporarily covered (pending a vulcanized repair), by cementing a small piece of rubberized fabric over it on the inside of the casing.

When deflation is due to an obscure cause (no puncture-producing object being found in any removed from the casing) there is always a possibility that a puncture has been produced by some sharp body which has been driven through the tread out of sight and projects enough on the inside of the casing (at least when the tire is under load) to prick the tube.

Detect Sharp Object. In order to detect such an object the hand should be passed carefully over the whole inside surface of the casing, and if anything sharp is noticed it should be investigated and removed. In inserting the new tube care should be taken that it lies flat, without twists or folds, and that it is so placed that it cannot be caught and pinched by the head of a clincher casing or by the edges of the flap (protector strip) of a quick detachable casing.

If the tube used has become stretched through use especial care should be taken that it is put in without folds. A little air in it is some safeguard against its being caught in any way.
